The Law of Acute Care Medicine

Dr. Laura A. Hawryluck, M.D., and Michael B. Fraleigh, J.D.

Complexities arise when medicine, law, and ethics intersect in the treatment and caring for acutely ill patients. This practical guide provides greater clarity and expert guidance into this interplay – a rapidly evolving area of concern.

Written by an eminent critical care physician and a leading legal practitioner, The Law of Acute Care Medicine is the first Canadian resource to focus exclusively on the needs of acute care professionals and those providing them with legal advice.

The book sets out a legal framework that all healthcare and legal professionals working in acute care settings need to understand. Case-based discussions and frequently asked questions are used to clearly illustrate the application of the law within clinical settings.

You'll also find an in-depth legal analysis of issues relating to the care of acutely deteriorating patients, and considerations of the application of the standard, causation, and damages on the care provided to such patients.

The medico-legal topics examined in this publication include:

- Application of standard of care
- Consent and capacity
- Confidentiality and privacy
- End of life, withdrawal of life support, CPR
- Medical Assistance in Dying (MAID)
